BIOGRAPHY OF JUSTIN TRUDEAU

ON APRIL 29, 2007, JUSTIN TRUDEAU WAS ELECTED LIBERAL CANDIDATE TO REPRESENT THE RIDING OF PAPINEAU IN THE NEXT FEDERAL ELECTION.

Thousands of liberal supporters came out to choose their next liberal candidate: Justin was the riding's choice, winning by a majority after the first round.

He succeeds where most politicians fail – he engages young Canadians. Capturing the attention of students from elementary school through to university, he champions liberal values. He uses these forums to defend the causes that are dear to his heart such as the environment and youth empowerment.

Over the years, he has worked with numerous environmental groups destined to protect our Canadian heritage such as Nature Conservancy of Canada and the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, supplementing his activism with graduate work in environmental geography at McGill University. During the summer of 2006, he chaired the youth task force of the Liberal Party Renewal Commission, generating ideas about how to engage more youth politically.

From 2002 to 2006, Justin was Chair of Katimavik, Canada's National Youth Service program, where he worked to help young people build a better Canada, one community at a time.

Shortly after completing a Bachelor of Arts in Literature at McGill University, Justin moved to Vancouver to earn a Bachelor of Education from the University of British Columbia.

For the five years he lived there, he taught French and other subjects in a number of different schools and school boards, acquiring first-hand experience in spreading bilingualism in Canada.

He is also involved with the Canadian Avalanche Foundation, promoting intelligent risk-taking and safety awareness while encouraging people to discover our magnificent wilderness.

Eldest son of former Canadian Prime Minister Pierre E. Trudeau, Justin was born on December 25, 1971. He is married to Sophie Grégoire; the couple welcomed their first child, Xavier James Trudeau on October 18, 2007.
